Inside Death Valley, the Hottest Place on Earth

There's hot, and then there's Death Valley hot. The national park, located in southeast California, reached a sizzling 130 degrees Fahrenheit (54 degrees Celsius) Aug. 16, 2020, the hottest official temperature recorded on Earth. Climate scientists are still verifying the record-breaking reading; if confirmed (a process that can take months), it would be Earth's all-time highest reliably recorded temperature.

Edison's Greatest Invention WASN'T the Lightbulb

When you think of famed inventor Thomas Edison, you probably think of the lightbulb, and while the introduction of Edison's lightbulb changed lives forever, it might not have been his most important achievement when it came to revolutionizing industries and everyday life.
