accomplishments in advancing diversity, will serve as the next city manager of the City of Sausalito, pending the City Council's approval of his employment contract at its May 25 meeting.

Zapata, 61, will be Sausalito's first Latino city manager since the post was created in 1955 and, as far as Sausalito can determine, will be the first Latino city manager in the history of Marin County. Zapata has nearly 30 years of city manager experience, serving five cities in California and Arizona, including two waterfront cities. Zapata was one of more than 50 candidates considered for Sausalito's top administrative post, a process that attracted a diverse pool of talent from across the country.

Hugs are finally coming back in style. It's scientifically proven that an affectionate embrace can lower stress throughout the day, or make us feel better after times of conflict.

Plenty of us can do without the trickle of polite social side hugs or prolonged, vise-like embraces. But there's a type of hug that always feels healing; when someone you love or trust wraps you in their arms. You let out a breath, your tension melts away, and suddenly the world feels just a little bit less harsh.

of clothing and face masks could help replace the need to quarantine airplane travelers after incoming flights. "What we're suggesting is that dogs would give the first initial screening, and then those (arrivals) that were indicated as positive would then receive a complimentary PCR test," declared co-author James Logan.

How does it work? The results are said to be more effective than temperature checks as they could detect mild or asymptomatic COVID-19 infections. Dogs that screened arrivals at airport terminals could detect 91% of cases, resulting in a 2.24x lower rate of transmission than with PCR tests alone.
