Sausalito's Best Bakery Is Hiding Behind the Counter of an Old-School Italian Restaurant

Trays of brown butter tarts, fresh fruit-filled galettes, and brioche cradling soft-boiled eggs and crispy slices of bacon beckon from atop a bar where patrons used to order cocktails at Angelino Restaurant, an old-school Italian spot in Sausalito. Now, a line of customers, each staring longingly at treats on the other side of the Plexiglass divider, winds through the dining room, the nutty scent of butter filling the air. The two mask-wearing women behind the counter seem to be on a first-name basis with everyone, laughing with customers and asking after their kids. The intimacy is palpable — even more so for the fact that it was largely absent during the socially distant days of 2020

What Type of Mask Should You Wear When You Fly?

The airlines have differing policies, and not all of them are clear. Here's what we know—and what we recommend.

In a staggering display of creativity and community, theater director Amir Nizar Zuabi introduces "The Walk": a theatrical journey following a nine-year-old refugee girl named Amal (represented by a giant, lifelike puppet) as she makes her way from Turkey to England. Zuabi shares the bold vision behind this cultural odyssey aimed at spreading hope and celebrating the refugee experience -- and joins us live from Turkey as Amal passes through a village.
