21 of the best and worst celebrity homes, as seen on Zoom calls

Celebrities are just like us... they also work from home during a global pandemic.

For the past few months, actors, celebrities, and politicians have been calling into virtual interviews, going live on social media, and having Zoom calls galore to do press, speak on current events, and communicate with fans. And with each celebrity Zoom call, we received small glimpses into their home lives.

Some big names like the Obamas and Dr. Anthony Fauci appeared to video chat from their home offices. Others, like Martha Stewart, Jane Fonda, and Oprah called in from an impressive kitchen or living room. But unfortunately, not everyone seems to take their backdrops into consideration before hopping on a video call.

The Cleverest Awards 2020: 50 Products That Work Harder in Your Home

The Cleverest Awards are back! As we present to you our third iteration, the world has become a very different place. Most of us are working from home if we're lucky (or trying to), we're creating new hobbies and habits (that might include a lot of sourdough and banana bread), and we're trying to stay safe and healthy (who has a new workout video obsession?).

In the animal kingdom, dads don't often stand out for their role as parent, mentor, and friend. But some are doing their part to change that reputation. Just like human fathers, animal dads can make extraordinary sacrifices for their children. But they also know when it's their offspring's time to leave the nest and seek out their own territory.

Hummingbirds Can See Colors That Humans Can't

Though tiny and delicate, hummingbirds are keen at adapting to their environment — whether building a nest with a leaf as a roof or using their expert eyes to scout out their surroundings.

Hummingbirds are also able to see colors that humans can't — and that gives them an edge when it comes to foraging, mating, and avoiding predators, a new study finds.
