Robin DiAngelo -- Deconstructing White Privilege

Academic and educator Robin DiAngelo has been running diversity-training and cultural-competency workshops for American companies for more than 20 years.

In her recent book, White Fragility: Why it's So Hard for White People to Talk About Racism, diAngelo argues that white people need to come to an understanding of the concepts of systemic racism and white privilege before they can take effective steps to help dismantle the effects of racism. Her Ted-style talk, Deconstructing White Privilege, offers a good introduction to the key concepts in her book. Stay tuned for link to join via Zoom.

Di Angelo's talk is 20 minutes long, which will leave us with ample time for discussion.

6 Bucket List Destinations for Beer Lovers

Whether you're an acolyte of American ales or bowing at the altar of altbier in Bavaria, any serious beer lover's bucket list should start with pilgrimages to the world's historic brewing centers. That basis established, the next obvious step is a solid steeping in today's brewing renaissance, which was sparked by the craft beer movement in the U.S. Of course, those who view brew biblically probably have a specific itinerary in mind, and the world of beer has so many historic and modern shrines, you could plan a different suds sabbatical for years. Below are some of the biggest items to check off of your list.

One morning in the fall of 1970, while sitting on the veranda looking at a book about Vincent Van Gogh, Don McLean found inspiration to write a song. "I put down the book and picked up my guitar...and started fiddling around, trying to get a handle on this idea, while the print of 'Starry Night' stared up at me. Looking at the picture, I realized that the essence of the artist's life is his art. And so, I let the painting write the song for me." Internationally, the song "Vincent" was a bigger hit than "American Pie." In 1972, it reached #1 in the UK and #12 in the USA. Watch McLean strum his guitar and sing this beloved song.
