Why We Reach for Nostalgia in Times of Crisis

Ever since the coronavirus lockdown began, I've been longing for my past. For some reason, I pine for the days when I would call a friend on her landline and get a busy signal, or inexplicably hid behind my precarious swivel chair the moment my crush logged on to AIM, the AOL messaging service. Even things in recent history that I thought were awful only a few months ago — failing to avoid “Avengers: Endgame” spoilers, or the White Claw seltzer shortage — now pale in comparison to the ongoing trauma of ... all of this.

Afternoon Tea & Discussion about the Plastics Industry on Monday August 3, 2020 from 1:00 PM to 2:00 PM

In 2019, the global market size for plastic was valued at more than 560 billion dollars. The trend continues to replace other materials used in many different products with polymers and finding new uses for plastic materials that increases the demand for plastic. BAO will lead a discussion about this topic. There is a film that investigates the history of plastic, recycling and waste and uses of plastic to view before our group discussion. Please register by visiting www.bayareaolderadults.org/afternoon-tea and check the box for The Plastics Industry.

Pandemics of Our Own Making

While it's critical that we devote our scientific ingenuity to beating back the current pandemic, we must also address our broken relationship with nature in a concerted effort to prevent similar outbreaks in the future.
