Whether you created your own Thanksgiving this year or celebrated with family, the next few weeks are sure to be challenging — for friends and families navigating even more tough decisions about the holidays to come, and doing everything we can to play our part in combating the spread of COVID-19.

Over the coming weeks, do your best to be present in conversations. Resist the urge to check your notifications and pay attention to the people you're catching up with.

The conversations might be tough. Everyone is going through something different right now. Take time to check in when your friends are having a hard time — but know when to leave the advice-giving to the experts.

These all might seem like small things. But, like wearing your mask or staying at home — they can make a big difference.

What it really means to 'give yourself grace'

In our search for calm and stability during a hellish year, perhaps no mantra stands out as more comforting than "give yourself grace."

Nature Journaling with John Muir Laws

Wednesday, December 9th at 4:00 pm

You're invited to a special event with artist, author, and educator John Muir Laws. John will take you on a virtual walk in the woods to explore with the eyes of a naturalist, discovering and celebrating the signs of the Bay Area season in a nature journal.

This event will start with the basics—people of all ages and experience levels are welcome! You'll learn the fundamentals of nature journaling through sketching and documenting mushrooms, seasonal birds, raindrops, and a misty winter landscape.

OUTSIDE

IN

December 3, 2020 — Outside In

The show that started this whole listening series idea: it's a surround sound escape from the pandemic. We'll travel from the banality inside our homes, back to a time before the coronavirus, to as far away from earth as possible. Featuring walruses, pulsars, funnels, chimes, hair dryers, and a deconstructed organ, along with Chris's wayward belt buckle. Get tickets
