Larry Brilliant and Peter Hotez: Vaccinating Our Way Out of the Pandemic

Now that the process is beginning for distribution of a vaccine for COVID-19 -- and another is close behind -- it seems as though ending the pandemic is finally in sight. But with the world's wealthy countries hoarding billions of vaccine doses, the majority of people living in developing countries likely won't get vaccinated in more than a year.

Dr. Larry Brilliant, best known for eradicating Smallpox, says that's a problem because the virus "will continue to ping pong back and forth among nations." "We cannot solve the COVID problem nationally. This is really a time for global cooperation." He and Dr. Peter Hotez, who is part of a team developing a low-cost COVID vaccine for global distribution, join Ray Suarez to discuss how we will be able to vaccinate our way out of the pandemic.

CURRENTS: San Francisco Symphony

A symphony orchestra is the center of the community in which it sits, a place where all the musical currents of a city come together. As these currents move forward and change, we discover and change with them. What does moving forward sound like?

The San Francisco Symphony presents CURRENTS, a four-part video series and accompanying podcast series featuring music and conversation around the changing perspectives for symphony orchestras today; curated by Michael Morgan and musicians of the San Francisco Symphony, with further learning and exploration led by Daniel Bartholomew-Poyser.
